RHODE ISLAND SCHOOL OF DESIGN
PROVIDENCE, RI

Before coming to RISD, we were defined by what surrounded us and we packed up those experiences and moved to Providence, Rhode Island. We converged at this point we call RISD, for four defining years of our lives, weaving those unique experiences together to form a truly unique bond.

And that's where the inspiration for this yearbook lies: the distances we traveled to be here, the different paths we discovered together, the many miles of experiences we shared, and most importantly, the incredible network of inspiring and unforgettable friends we will have when we take on the next stage of our lives.

0 miles
PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND

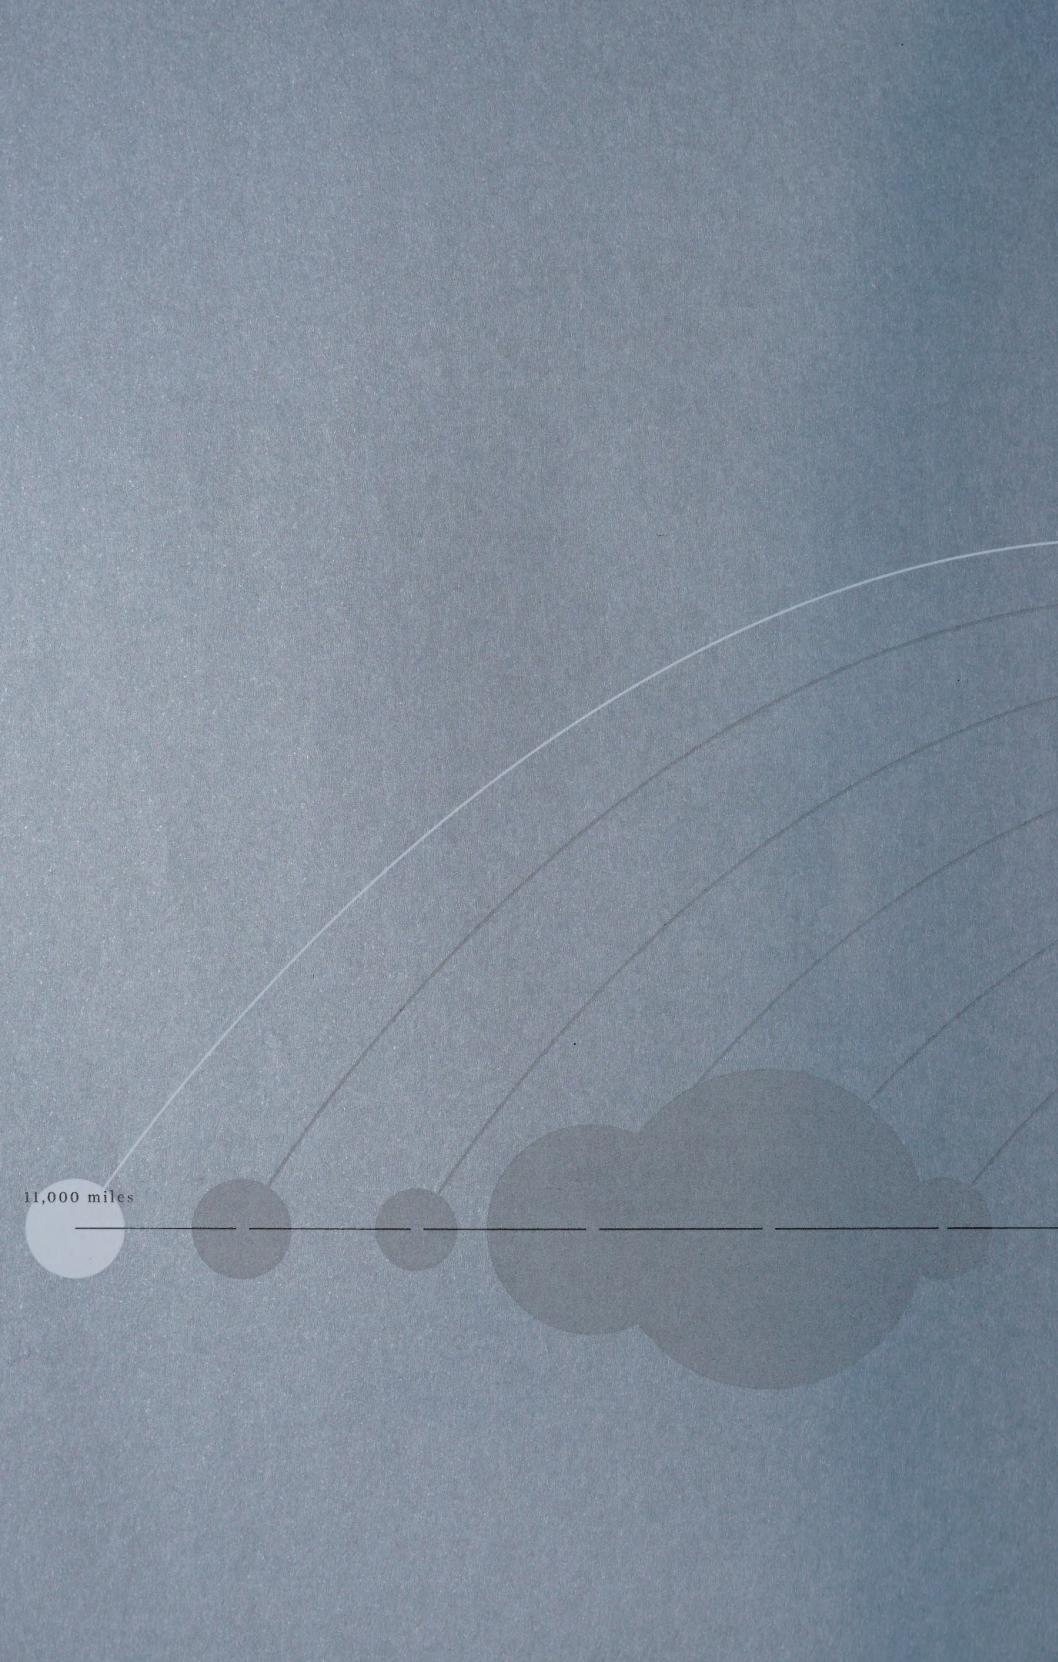

They say time's a thief. It's also an artist, though. Time designs collages, writes poetry, makes up graphic logos. You look backward through a rear window and see patterns, motifs, symbols, the divinity that shapes our ends, our lives. Your commencement robs us of you and leaves us, as you pack your trunks and take off, a little bit forlorn and bereft after the ceremonies, for a spell. It's as if you steal everything in sight, I mean the ghosts of everything in sight: the roses from College Street, the statues around the Orpheus fountain, the paintings and sculptures in the museum, the words, wise or wacky, declared by faculty and, perhaps, scribbled down in your notebooks. All these things seem to lose their color without your presence. The place seems empty after graduation. The notes and sketches you leave in your wake, they bring you back. These foolish things remind us of you. You take all RISD away with you and smuggle us over the borders and boundaries of the wide world. Even so, it takes us a while to get over your absence, for everything to rebuild itself.

You re-create and graft RISD all over the Atlas of the planet Earth. You put down roots and bear fruit wherever you roam. Like Paris, Providence is a movable feast.

Time may be a burglar, but time also returns treasures in fresh forms. Time as it goes by surprises us with your future fates and careers.

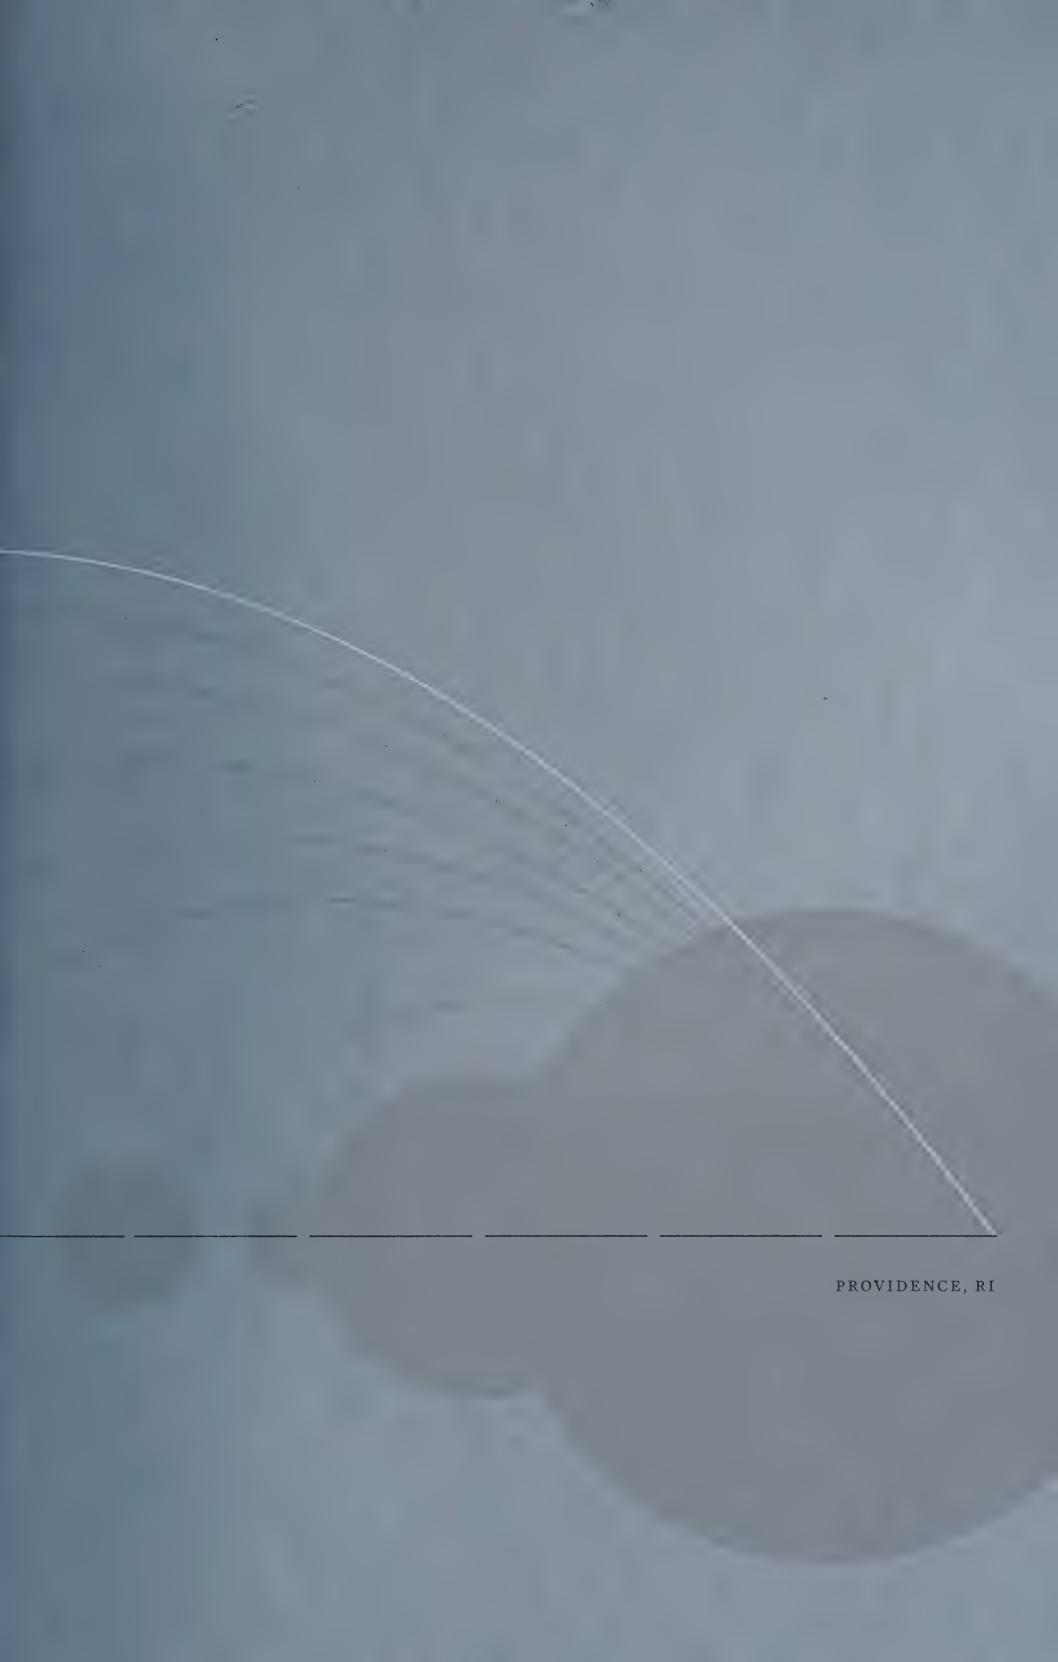

Well, after all, it's a strained analogy about your swiping the school-- you aren't really taking away anything that doesn't already belong to you. You ARE this school of design, you brought it with you when you first came to town: your talents, your particular genius, and you projected your hopes and dreams upon us, so you are reclaiming your own property. Besides, of course, you bought it fair and square. Without you, there wouldn't be a school. Buildings and grounds, faculty and board, they depend upon you, and all RISD is yours to possess. Thank you for what you have brought to us and taught us: with best wishes for good fortune upon your migrations.

A diagram illustrating the circumference of Earth. A horizontal line represents the equator, with a callout bubble pointing to it from the top left. The text "11,000 miles" is inside the bubble. From the center of the equator, several curved lines of increasing length radiate outwards, representing great circles. The farthest line on the right is labeled "11,000 miles".

A diagram illustrating the Earth's atmosphere. The atmosphere is shown as a series of concentric, semi-transparent layers surrounding the planet. The innermost layer is a light blue circle, representing the troposphere. The layers transition in color from light blue to darker blue and then to a light teal. A horizontal line with arrows at both ends extends across the diagram. A vertical line connects the center of the Earth to the top of this horizontal line. The text "7,000 miles" is positioned near the center of the horizontal line, indicating the radius of the Earth's atmosphere.
